Residence for Tax Purposes

Place a checkmark in the appropriate residence box. There are two tests used to determine whether a non-U.S. citizen should be classified as a U.S. resident or as a nonresident alien for tax purposes. They are the "green card" test and the substantial presence test. An alien who does not qualify under either test is defined for income tax purposes as a non-resident alien. For further information, you may refer to IRS Publication 519, U.S. Tax Guide for Aliens.

The "substantial presence test" (SPT) is the Internal Revenue Service's method of determining whether an individual has been present in the U.S. long enough to qualify as a resident alien for tax purposes; and, therefore, if the individual is subject to tax on his or her worldwide income. The substantial presence test is not used for immigration purposes, but to determine the Federal tax withholding status. An individual will be treated as a U.S. resident for tax purposes in the current year if he or she is physically present in the U.S. for at least 31 days during the current calendar year and a total of 183 days during a three-year period.

To meet the SPT test, you must be physically present in the United States on at least:

- 31 days during the current year, and
- 183 days during the 3-year period that includes the current year and the 2 years immediately before that, counting:
 - All the days you were present in the current year, and
 - 1/3 of the days you were present in the first year before the current year, and
 - 1/6 of the days you were present in the second year before the current year.

Do not count any day you were in the United States as an exempt individual. An exempt individual may be anyone in the following categories:

- A foreign government-related individual
- A teacher or trainee with a J or Q visa who substantially complies with the requirements of the visa – (limited to two calendar years)
- A student with an F, J, M or Q visa who substantially complies with the requirements of the visa – (limited to five calendar years); or
- A professional athlete temporarily present to compete in a charitable sports event
